[Tide To You]

The ocean and I are one in the same
Hopelessly awaiting your return.
We host visitors who litter our bodies
Frantically fleeing to catch their next wave.

All eager to plunge our currents
And nobody willing to stay.

With great depths and uncharted waters
Drowning in our own sweet solitude.
Masked by sunsets and salty air
But we will never be free.

With so many fish in the neighboring sea
Why must I crash each night at your feet?
