This poem is from a sequence of work based on poems by George Oppen from his book Primitive. There were these essays on writing by John McPhee which appeared in the New Yorker magazine a few years ago. In one of them, he said something about noticing dead words in his narratives, and he would replace them with their dictionary definitions to resolve the problem. That sounded fun as a process, so I replaced every single word in the poems by Oppen with dictionary definitions and then edited these down to this new work.
