

Mark Cunningham

[sort]

After she caught her breath, she said it's when people are choking like that and can't speak that they need help, and he said now you tell me. The power of simile: nuclear energy is like solar power, and "in rest homes patients hang on as if to love." My favorite time to see the Milky Way is a clear night in November or March when I step outside wearing a t-shirt, and it's a little too cold, but I don't want to go back inside. A rock can't be smashed into pieces, because each piece becomes a separate rock.

[sort]

John Locke said continuity of consciousness constitutes an individual, though he didn't record what he was thinking just before he came up with that idea. She was saying something interesting about the mind being ungraspable, so when the call came through on the other line, I asked her to hold that thought. Meaning of vertigo = vertigo of meaning. I crossed the street and the rest was history. Then I walked down the block and crossing the street was history.

[sort]

At first, all we could talk about was the car. Later, we could talk about the car wreck, too. He has the erased de Kooning drawing, but I collect burned-out fluorescent tubes from Dan Flavin pieces.

[sort]

I like sunlight when it hits the window at an angle so you can't see much else but the dust on the window pane. I'm still trying to figure out what he meant when he said that a good player's mind slows down when the action around it gets hectic. The no of our where. We gave the new organism a name from a dead language so everybody would understand. Someone almost there vs. almost someone there.